

Pannes between Sandbanks and Dunes Beaches on the West Lake Bar

The pannes are that area between the rows of foredunes and the main dunes on the West Lake Bar. At the water-table, they usually hold water until mid-summer, until the lake levels begin to drop, and are home to a variety of creatures.

Because they are landlocked, and temporary, they provide the perfect habitat for many of the Sandbanks plant and animal species, free of predation by fish that live in the nearby lakes.
